How Environmentalists Can Bring California to Your State

The State of California continues to be a regulatory/legislative challenge for independent producers. Despite the fact that California ranks third amongst states for crude oil production, state officials and the environmental NGOs continue to press for stricter regulation of the industry. This session will include industry leaders familiar with operating in California and other state experts who can discuss the impact of oil and natural gas opponents using state regulatory processes to limit production in the absence of federal initiatives.

PANELISTS

Dave Quast, Senior Director, Strategic Communications, FTI Consulting/Energy In Depth, California
Alexis Street, Government Affairs Advisor, Chevron U.S.A.
Rock Zierman, CEO, CIPA

Why Cyber Security Matters to the ENTIRE Oil & Gas Community Presented by Booz Allen Hamilton

There's a common myth among smaller and mid-size companies that "no one would hack us". Wrong. It happens to companies of all shapes and sizes. Getting cyber security right is critical to your business success.

The connectivity sprawl of your enterprise has far surpassed the once-confined IT environment. Just in the last few years, operating environments have changed greatly: the push to the cloud, connected production systems, IoT-enabled pipelines, and a broad mix of business partners (mergers, acquisitions, contractors, etc.). This all creates immense exposure, and at the same time, more threat actors are seeking to exploit these vulnerable applications and environments as much as they are targeting specific companies. When they do target the super majors, adversaries usually look throughout the ecosystem to see if they can identify a weak link among the small and mid-size companies in the supply chain. Intellectual property and customer data theft; production disruption; and health, safety, and environment impacts are all potential outcomes. So, what to do?

In this session, Booz Allen's cyber security experts will provide you a useful framework for how to frame this challenge, and important recommendations for making near-term progress. If not already the case, your board, executives, and shareholders will soon be demanding answers in how you're addressing cyber security to protect and enable the business. Join this session to get an actionable foundation.

2017 OIL AND NATURAL GAS MARKET OUTLOOK | Hosted by the Supply & Demand Committee

The past few years have been particularly challenging times for U.S. oil and gas producers given the collapse in commodity prices and the attempts by OPEC to regain market share. The market has stabilized since the lows of early 2016 but challenges for U.S. producers remain as long as oversupply and high inventories persist. Over time, America's oil and gas industry has proven its resiliency by doing more with less and incorporating more advanced technologies into their operations to help them become more efficient. This panel of experts will look at some of the strategies companies have used to survive, share their views on the current state of oil and gas markets, and provide an outlook for what the future might have in store for the industry.
